JACOB GOOD
♀ and his brother
CHRISTIAN GOOD

With keen interest in the preservation of the family record of Jacob Good and his brother Christian Good, we, the undersigned have endeavored to bring this record up to date. This issue is as complete as it has been possible to make it, although there may be errors in dates, while others have not been entered, due to the failure of members of families to comply with our request for information.

GENERATION 1 — A LINEAGE

Jacob Good and his brother Christian Good were Mennonites and they emigrated from the Palatinate.

They settled here in 1738 near the village of Bowmansville, on the branch of the Muddy Creek. Jacob Good arrived at this spot and chose it for his new home. On the right bank of the stream and a short distance below the confluence of the two forks of the middle branch of the Muddy Creek, where he took lodging under the inviting shelter of a patriarchal white oak tree, and deposited the household goods which he had brought with him.

This is the farm on which Monroe H. Good now lives where Jacob Good built his new home in 1738. Jacob Good purchased the ground on which he and his family settled. The land warrant is dated June 15, 1738.

Their new home was completely isolated from the rest of the civilized world. They were ignorant of existence of any neighbors, until one day the clarion voice of a cock greeted the ears of the new families. While wandering through the woods at some distance from the house this led them to a joyous discovery, that other settlers had come to the same neighborhood. This gave them assurance that the surrounding country was inviting. The country was one wilderness and vast forest, inhabited by wild beasts and Indians.

GENERATION 1 — CHRISTIAN GOOD

Settled on a branch of the Muddy Creek, near the village of Bowmansville. The land warrant dated June 15, 1738. (Same as his brother Jacob).

Christian erected the first grist mill on the south fork of the Muddy Creek. The mill and dwelling were all under one roof.

The first Mennonite service was held in this community. They were held in the dwelling and mill combined and owned by Christian Good. On the same premises now known as the Henry VonNeida Mill. Later a stone mill and separate dwelling were built.

Christian raised a family of 17 children, six sons, 11 daughters. He died August 13, 1757. His will remains on file among the old and rusty papers in the registrars office of Lancaster. It is dated August 11, 1757. He died two days later. The will commences with a quotation from Hebrews 9-17.

Thus passed the quick succession of Spring, Summer and Autumn of the first year of the first settlers—too busy with the present to think of the past; too resolute to give way to despair or home sickness. A wide ocean separated them from their fatherland to which they might only return to live, yielding to what to them was more precious than life itself—the privilege of worshipping God according to their own faith and belief.

It was when Winter had set in and out-door employments were fewer, that the household within the narrow limits of the log house and possibly necessities of life wanting, that their isolated condition became more keenly felt. The ordeal became more trying and in their extremities they turned to the Bible for comfort and promises it contained. No one can write a truthful history of these people and not make mention of their serious religious spirits that prevailed.
